PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

Course Description

Our course is designed to provide the practicing clinician, both generalists and allergists, with updates on the diagnosis and management of food allergies. The didactic lecture component, geared for both generalists and allergists, will focus on the different types of food allergies, identification and treatment of anaphylaxis, and potential treatments currently under investigation for food allergy.

In addition, we will have break-out interactive workshops, with separate tracks specific for generalists and allergists. For the generalists, the workshop topic will address the role of food allergy in atopic dermatitis. For the allergists, the workshops will discuss oral food challenges in the office setting and clinical conundrums in food allergy. Our goal is to provide a unique, interactive course that elucidates the scientific advances which support current clinical practice guidelines for food allergy.

Who Should Attend

Pediatricians, family practice physicians, internal medicine physicians, and allergy & immunology specialists. Other health professionals include NPs, PAs, RNs, fellows, residents, and medical students.

Learning Objectives

Upon completion of this activity, the participant will be able to:

- Recognize indications and select appropriate tests to diagnose food allergy
- Identify risk factors for anaphylaxis and counsel families on management of allergic reactions
- Appreciate nutritional impacts of food allergy and provide families with dietary guidance to ensure optimal growth and development
- Evaluate potential treatments for food allergy that are currently under investigation
- Discuss the diagnosis and management of non-IgE mediated food allergies

Accreditation

The Icahn School of Medicine Mount Sinai is accredited by the Accreditation Council for Continuing Medical Education to provide continuing medical education for physicians.
